DISASTER PREPAREDNESS TRAINING

Disaster preparedness training is designed to equip individuals, communities, and organizations with the knowledge and skills needed to effectively respond to emergencies and minimize the impact of disasters. It typically includes education on identifying potential hazards, developing emergency plans, practicing evacuation procedures, administering first aid, using emergency supplies, and coordinating with response agencies. The goal is to enhance readiness, reduce risks, and ensure quick, organized action during disasters such as earthquakes, floods, fires, or pandemics.

TRAINER INFORMATION

Blake Brugman leads ATI Restoration's Anaheim office as Regional Manager, bringing more than 17 years of hands-on experience in restoration and environmental services. He drives large-scale recovery, remediation, and reconstruction projects while providing strategic leadership, operational direction, and client support across Southern California. Since 2022, Blake and his team have completed over 9,000 projects worth more than $130 million. Blake's expertise spans fire, smoke, and water restoration, emergency response, and environmental remediation. He holds IICRC Master Water Restorer and Master Textile Cleaner certifications and has completed OSHA 30-hour training, along with additional credentials in microbial remediation, fire and smoke restoration, and structural drying. A graduate of California State University, Fullerton, with a Bachelor of Arts in Communications. Blake is recognized for his strong leadership, technical proficiency, and commitment to safety, quality, and client satisfaction.
